

Norman Rockwell was one of the America's most beloved artists. In 1916, the 22 year old Rockwell mustered up some courage and sold his first cover to "The Saturday Evening Post." The picture was of an uncomfortable young boy diligently pushing a baby carriage past a group of sneering boys in baseball uniforms. It was titled "Mother's Day Off." Rockwell went on to create 321 covers for the Post, each portraying American life and values. His covers were so successful that when his art appeared on the cover, 75,000 additional copies sold at newsstands. The covers later become his greatest legacy.

Through the years, Rockwell's renditions of Americana appeared all over the world. His "Four Freedoms" raised $139.9 million for war bonds.
